DUBBO'S EXTRAORDINARY PEOPLE

Each week Dubbo Photo News will catch up with one of our many fabulous volunteers around town. This week we caught up with...

after volunteering with organisations such as The Scouts and more, Lakota Peter Jost currently volunteers here in Dubbo with the Kind Dubbo Rotary Club and Taronga Western Plains Zoo.

Two have in rotary now for nearly four years," Peter said, after originally joining just to meet people in the community. Peter's role is part of the Board of Management as the Director of Club Administration.

Peter is currently involved with a project to renovate a lookout area for locals and visitors as well as interesting tourists locally and internationally. "One of the projects I'm closely involved with is getting a fitness lookout at the top of Beattie Hill," he said.

"We're looking to renovate all the sun around the space and, think Tele, Anywhere Lake, a few customers out there, so I can really get to know the area so I can show that extra customers for a better experience, and like to also back to the Zoo as well," Peter said.

Peter says he loves a whole host of things, "I love the Zoo, by the animal watch, it's the

Running to prevent drowning

By NATALIE HOLMES

WITH most people spent three days last week doing mundane things like going to work and doing their housework, Peter Tracey was very literally on the ground running to raise money for a charity near to their hearts.

Led by Peter Tracey, the group of 10 walked 80km to 80Km from Dubbo to Orange to help the Adam Crouch Foundation, of which Peter is a director.

The organisation is named in honour of a little boy who sadly drowned in a backyard pool, and Peter, a father of four, became involved for two reasons.

"I knew Adam and his family very well and I also helped to set up the McGrath Foundation so his parents asked for my help," he said.

On the fourth anniversary of Adam's death on a warm spring Dubbo day, the group arrived in the city to begin their journey.

"We started off feeling with enthusiasm and ready to run.

"I suppose we saw it as a bit of an adventure," Peter said. "You always read about people doing things like this for charity so we decided to do a charity walk as a good mixture of the two with a few elements that come from all walks of life. Peter's an accountant, while there's also a roofing contractor, a retail assistant manager, a police officer, shower shop proprietor a brewery transport operator and two teachers.

Although they have in common in their love of the run.

"Most of these guys are really good runners," Peter said. "They run a lot."

In the end, they covered 80km in the first two days, and then the final 40km from Kanwarra in order to be in the suburb of Sydney for the finish-line celebrations on Saturday, October 13. They raised $7900 and made it home safe and sound, despite accidentally leaving a runner behind at Kanwarra on day one.

After departing from the business of Dubbo sponsor Dunn and Farrugia, the guys aimed to also raise awareness for water safety, particularly for backyard pools.

"It's almost like it was meant to happen this way," Peter said. "Maybe the little guy's watching over us."
